The Grub-ſtreet Journal. NUMB. 145.

Thursday, OCTOBER 12. 1732.

Mr. BAVIUS,

IN my letter to you, about three weeks ago, I endeavoured to ſhew the great uſefulneſs of coffee-houſes, in propagating juſt notions of government and religion; two things neceſſary to be underſtood by all perſons, ſince both their temporal and eternal intereſts depend upon the one and the other. Were there no other evidence, that the generality of mankind are capable of attaining to ſuch juſt notions, the great importance and neceſſity of them would be proof ſufficient. For how is it conſiſtent with the divine goodneſs or juſtice, to place thoſe two things out of their reach, 'in which (to uſe Mr. OSBORNE's words) the 'well-being of men are more concerned, than in all other 'things put together?' But the contrary is fully confirmed by experience, as I have lately obſerved to you; againſt which no valid argument can poſſibly be brought. For we dayly ſee many inſtances of perſons, of all orders and degrees, who, applying themſelves to a careful peruſal of the weekly labours of ſome of your members, become inſenſibly conſummate politicians and divines.

From hence it is natural to infer theſe two concluſions: That the reading of theſe pieces is a religious, as well as a civil duty; and That if this duty be performed, as it ought, upon a ſaturday, there is little or no occaſion for appearing at any place of public inſtruction upon a ſunday. —— If there be any obligation at all to obſerve one day in the week in a different manner from the reſt, to forbear the ordinary works of one's employment, and to appropriate part of it to religious exercices, it ſeems highly reaſonable that it ſhou'd be left to the diſcretion of every perſon, to chuſe that day, which it may be moſt convenient for him to ſpend in this manner. Agreeably to this, a learned Philoſophical Enquirer and great Comedian, publicly adviſed the people in the country, in the time of the late harveſt, to carry in their corn on a ſunday, for fear of bad weather, rather than to go to church. Whether this gentleman's pious admonitions came into their hands time enough, or not; or whether they followed or neglected them, I cannot tell: but I am certain, that the mechanics in this city, who are leſs prieſt-ridden, are too intelligent to need any advice of this nature, whenever their buſineſs requires more than ordinary haſte.

But neither theſe, nor any perſons of a ſuperior ſtation, either in city, or country, have occaſion at all to be adviſed, not to ſuffer their chriſtian liberty to be reſtrained by a ſuperſtitious performance of religious exercices on this day, in places ſet apart for that purpoſe. Great numbers, eſpecially of the beau monde, the people of faſhion, ſeldom or never make their appearance in any of theſe places, unleſs to qualify themſelves to ſerve their country: and yet their notions of religion, as well as of government, are as juſt, and their lives as free from all ſcandalous and notorious vices, as thoſe of many of the conſtant attendants upon religious ordinances. A plain demonſtration this, that theſe things are not ſo efficacious and neceſſary, as a certain ſet of men, whoſe intereſt it is to have them thought ſo, would endeavour to perſuade the world; and likewiſe, that there is ſome other method of inſtruction as effectual, whereby perſons may learn political and religious duties, and become both good ſubjects and good men. And pray, what method can have ſo juſt a claim for approbation, as the conſtant reading of thoſe weekly compoſitions which treat of matters of policy, morality, and religion, with ſuch admirable brevity and perſpicuity? eſpecially if they are read in a place where there is an opportunity of conſulting ingenious and learned perſons, immediately, upon any difficulty which may ariſe. This is a circumſtance, which gives a coffee-houſe the advantage of a church, or of a conventicle, where all perſons are obliged to hear in ſilence whatever abſurdity happens to be dictated from the pulpit.

This indeed, is an advantage which the fair ſex, and people of mean fortune, who do not frequent coffee-houſes, cannot injoy: and therefore it is no wonder, that they do not arrive to ſo high a degree of knowledge in politics and religion. However, it is certain, that all theſe, if it be not their own fault, may attain to ſuch a degree as is neceſſary for them. The papers I have been recommending, which contain this invaluable treaſure of true wiſdom and learning, are offered to ſale in all parts of this great city, and at a low price. The diſadvantage therefore in not reading them at a coffee-houſe may, in a good meaſure, be ſupply'd by carefully peruſing them at home; particularly on a ſaturday night, or ſunday morning: and when any doubts ariſe, they may debate them at leiſure, the former over their tea, and the latter over their tobacco and their ale, on ſunday evening.

All wiſe and good men, Mr. BAVIUS, have long ſeen the inconvenience, not to ſay injuſtice, of maintaining a particular ſet of idle men, at ſo vaſt an expence as the tenth part of the improved value of all lands, which they claim as their due. It is my humble opinion, in which I hope I have the concurrence of all unprejudiced and thinking perſons, that it would be infinitely more for the advantage of the nation in general, and of every individual in particular, if this great revenue was to be applied to the payment of the national debts, and to the reward of ſuch perſons as ſhould diſtinguiſh themſelves weekly in political, moral, and religious diſſertations. One of theſe might be read every morning and afternoon at the public aſſemblies upon a certain day in every week; as homilies were appointed to be read at the beginning of the reformation. Theſe aſſemblies it may be proper to keep up at the uſual times and places; becauſe the generality of perſons have a great regard for thoſe, to which they have been long accuſtomed. The perſon who is to officiate ought to be appointed by the ſtate; and no one ſhould be obliged to contribute to his maintenance, which ſhall ariſe ſolely from voluntary ſubſcriptions, and from the rate of pews. The reading of theſe eſſays may be accompanied with Expoſitions, Orations, Prælections, Lectures, Poſtills, &c. after the manner of the ORATORY; which I take to be the beſt plan for the propagating a religion in which all conſiderate men agree. In one particular I muſt decline a little from that great pattern, and would have the wedneſday's exercice reſtrained to ſunday evenings; becauſe almoſt all denominations of Chriſtians now agree in ſpending that time in diverſions. But I intirely approve of the ſituation of the ORATORY over a coffe-houſe; and think that all other Oratories ſhould come as near to it as poſſible. And therefore I propoſe, that a coffee-houſe ſhould be opened adjoining to every church. This will be of great advantage both to the orators, and their audiences: the former, who are to have the property of them, may either keep them by their wives, or let them out to others; and the latter may reap all that benefit by converſation, mentioned in the former part of this letter, from, Sir,

Oct. 7. 1732. Your moſt humble ſervant, D. D.

To Bavius, at the ſign of the flying-beaſt, (called by the heathen Poets, a Pegaſus) in Grub-ſtreet, London.

Tottenham, the 6th of the 8th Month (otherwiſe termed in the language of heathen Rome, October) 1732.

Friend BAVIUS,

INaſmuch as thou waſt ſo kind to let my brethren AMINADAB and OBADIAH, have place in thy Paper, I am in hopes thou wilt not neglect a poor handmaid, in reſpect to the following.—— For,

How can I do otherwiſe than cry out as the holy prophet did, Wo to her that is filthy and polluted, Zeph. ii. 1. tho' he ſpoke that of a city, yet I cannot but pronounce it of one RUTH COLLINS, who pretending to be one of the houſhold of faith, hath lately put forth a book, called the Friendly Writer, and Regiſter of Truth, filled with the marks of the language of the beaſt, and proud titles of men of vain minds; yea, and lies too: of all which together, there are not leſs than twelve dozen inſtances, ſome whereof I ſhall point out.

1. O abomination! ſhe hath cauſed a picture to be made of herſelf; the dreſs and appearance of which hath no reſemblance of a holy ſiſter; but much like that of a whore, yea, a whore of Babylon!

2. In the title ſhe hath called the Month of September, the Ninth Month; which, by the faithful was always reckoned but the Seventh. Next, ſhe promiſeth to give an account of thoſe, who ſpeak evil of dignities; which is what the ſons of vanity have charged on the children of truth, becauſe they make no diſtinction of ſuch. Alſo, of ſuch that depart in the fleſh; a ſaying not uſed by them to ſhew forth dying, as ſhe ſeemeth here to intend it. Tho' I really think, according to the outward letter, it ſhould rather be underſtood of ſuch diſhoneſt ſons of darkneſs who run away from their creditors; for this is really a departing in the fleſh: and certainly, if ſhe can give accounts of theſe, and of their deeds, it will rejoice the hearts of many. But, the ſpirit of truth giveth me to perceive her to be one of thoſe the wiſe man ſpeaketh of, ſaying,—a deceitful witneſs ſpeaketh lies, Prov. xiv. 25. — For ſhe ſayeth, JOHN ISTED, at the ball of gold; which ſeemeth to be an untruth; for it is to be queſtioned, whether he hath ſo much of that valuable metal (in the world's eſteem) to ſpare, as to hang it out for a ſign.

3. In the preface ſhe ſpeaketh half in the ſpeech of Aſhdod, as did the degenerated Iſraelites of old, Neh. xiii. 24. and therefore certainly is a worſhipper of Dagon, a god of wood: for, behold, ſhe applieth the words, Majeſty, and ſacred Name of Majeſty to an earthly king and queen; which belong only to the great Majeſty of heaven. And alſo ſayeth, that our friend and Brother, JOHN HUGGONSON, putteth forth every Fourth Day, a Paper of Rebuke and Admonition: whereas he doth not do any ſuch thing. O horrible daughter of Belial! bitterneſs and ſorrow will one day be thy portion for theſe things.

4. In p. 5. out of the groſs darkneſs of her heart ſhe uttereth theſe words, September Month; in 7. Maſter Thomas Briand —— Lord the King —— victorious Duke of Marlborough — noble good Woman, 8 Worſhipful; 9. ſhe ſayeth, the Dogs that are (I ſuppoſe intended for the vain ſport of hunting) kept to yield Pleaſure and Delight; 10. Reverend Maſter; 11. Dame — noble Earl — Sacriſtan; 13. Admiral; 15. Sabbath-Day; p. 20, 21, 22, 23, 24. are full of the language of Aſhdod; 25. honoured with the Title and Renown; 26. goodly Order; 27. much Rejoicings — a coſtly building for our Merriment; 33. Paſtime and Delight; 44. April Month.

And becauſe this pretended ſiſter, RUTH, in her vain imagination, thought that nonſenſe was agreeable to the language of the children of the light, ſhe has uttered among many others theſe ſentences following; p. 9. the Norfolk ſtreet of the Strand; 11. the ſquare Building (meaning Salisbury court); 15. Linnen Garments which Men wear next their Skins; 17. Leaden Particles (meaning ſhot); 18. Parents Jewiſh; 19. Maſter Leſtock and his Help-Mate; 20. Leathren-Contrivance (before it was Leathern Conveniencies, p. 10.); 15. Invention for telling the Hour of the Day, (a Watch); 23. the Preſider; 28. all in like order to live; 30. Money-Changers-ſtreet.

But, oh! ſhe hath committed a more abominable ſin ſtill, in ſpewing forth revilings on the ſons of JACOB, the true ISRAELITES, and beloved of the Lord: for ſhe ſayeth, p. 6. And the Friends of JACOB, (who dwelleth in the Tents of the Whore of Babylon) are greatly troubled, becauſe, ſay they — we cannot deviſe againſt the People we have long wiſhed Evil to: and p. 26. And none ſhewed any Diſlikings or evil Countenance, but the Friends of Jacob. What horrible wickedneſs is here? Oh profane RUTH! when did the friends of Jacob dwell in the tents of Babylon? No; they are ſuch that depart from the laws of their father JACOB, and pervert the way of the Lord, who abide in her polluted borders: for even Balaam was forced to cry out, How goodly are thy tents, O Jacob, and thy tabernacles, O Iſrael! Numb. xxiv. 5. And when did'ſt thou, O vile babler! know the friends of JACOB to wiſh evil to thoſe that were good? or, to ſhew Diſlikings, or evil Countenance at good tidings? No; the true Iſraelites (or ſons, or friends of Jacob) were the forwardeſt in rejoicing, and bringing the king back, 2 Sam. xix, 10, 11, 12. But, verily, verily, thou ſhalt no more be called RUTH, but Jezebel, who ſought the deſtruction of the friends of JACOB, by ſlaying their prophets, 1 Kin. xviii. 13. and other wicked deeds; and who painted and tired herſelf like a harlot, and mocked, and ſcoffed, 2 Kin. ix. 30, 31. as even thou doeſt: and ſurely thy portion will be accordingly; for thou plainly appeareſt to be one of that wicked race, the wiſe man hath mentioned, whoſe houſe is the way to hell, going down to the chambers of death. Prov. vii. 27.

Now, friend BAVIUS, having a little eaſed my ſpirit of the burthen that lay on it, in relation to this ſpeckled harlot, who hath thus ſported herſelf with the innocent friends of JACOB, and put forth for ſale ſo much merchandize of myſtical Babylon, in order to make the ſons and daughters of men drunk with the fornications and ſorceries thereof, I ſhall take my leave:

Who am thy friend in the Truth,

ESTHER ZEALOUS.

To the author of a thing, called an Epigram, in the Grub-ſtreet Journal, numb. 144.

Good Sir,

I Am a little at a loſs how to term the verſes you were pleaſed to make, in anſwer to mine, in the laſt

Journal. By the conciſeneſs they ſhould be an Epigram; but there is not one of thoſe qualities of which that ſort of poetry ought to conſiſt. Where is the exact and apt agreement of the whole, the ſymmetry, the natural ſimplicity, the poignant turn of wit? The little education I have had, has enabled me to look over MARTIAL (whom, I hope, you will allow to be a good epigrammatiſts) and, I do not find one epigram of his, which has not ſome, and eſpecially the laſt of theſe beauties. Well then, 'tis plain it is not an Epigram, but an elaborate piece, compoſed in about five weeks, without reaſon, and with very diſputable rhime, merely to cavil at the gentlemen upon whom my verſes were written, and not at me. For ſheathe and death can hardly be allowed to be rhime: and then, Sir, you lay down a poſitive contradiction, with no argument to ſupport it; and laſtly conclude, I have murdered a ſet of gentlemen, becauſe you do not happen to like them.

I did not think either the verſes or the author were of ſo much conſequence as to be taken notice of: but ſince it is otherwiſe, give me leave to tell you, I am ſo far from retracting what I have written, that it the more ſtrongly convinces me I am in the right; for nothing leſs than envy could aſſert a falſehood, without attempting to maintain it. —— I ſhall conclude with a line you may perhaps have read, viz.

Invidus alterius rebus macreſcit opimis: And am,

Octob. 6. 1732. Dear Sir, yours, PHILO-DIVES.

P. S. I am obliged to you, however, for raiſing me to to the dignity of a conſtable.

The ſame day her grace the dutcheſs of Buckingham's coaches ſet out for Dover, in order to bring home her grace, who is now at Calais, where ſhe has been for ſome months. C.

Yeſterday George James, Printer of the Daily-Poſt-Boy, according to order appear'd before the court of aldermen; where, after receiving a reprimand from the court, for groſsly miſrepreſenting the ſpeeches ſpoken by the lord mayor and recorder at Guildhall on Michaelmas-day, in his Paper of September the 30th. he acknowledg'd his offence, ask'd pardon of the lord mayor, of Mr. baron Thomſon, and of the court, and promiſed never to offend in the like manner for the future. Upon which the court was ſo favourable to him as to diſcharge him without any farther proſecution. DP.

On friday died Mr. Brevin, the city ſurveyor. DP. — Yeſterday died George Woodford Eſq; upwards of 90 years of age, worth 50000l. C. —— Formerly a Black-well-hall-factor. DP.

From the PEGASUS in Grub-ſtreet.

Mr. BAVIUS,

HAving obſerved in the publick papers, particularly in the Grub-ſtreet Journal of the 21ſt inſtant a paragraph, which cautions all clergymen from acting as juſtices of the peace, whoſe livings are not rated at 100*l. per ann. in the king's books*; and believing it to be inſerted there by ſome malicious pettyfogger, (and not by any gentleman of the long robe,) in order to diſſuade ſeveral worthy perſons from ſerving their country; I deſire you to give the following article a place in your Journal, which will very much oblige

Your conſtant reader, &c. A. B.

It is the opinion of all perſons learned in the law, that glebe and tithes are freeholds, and that the owners of them, whether clergymen or laymen, may act as freeholders according to the value of their eſtates, viz. as commiſſioners of ſewers, if worth forty marks, and commiſſioners of the land-tax if worth 100l. per ann. without any reſpect had to what their livings are rated at in the king's books. And therefore 'tis evident to all perſons of common ſenſe, that the late act of parliament, for qualifying juſtices of the peace, does not diſable any clergyman in commiſſion from acting as ſuch, if his living be bonâ fide worth 100 l. per ann. Unleſs theſe learned perſons, out of pique to the order, would diſqualify all clergymen, as the legiſlature has thought fit to do all attorneys and ſolicitors, &c. However, if there be no averring againſt the king's books; on condition that the clergy be not taxed higher than they are rated there, (which is equally reaſonable,) I'll venture to aver, that ſuch as are in the commiſſion of the peace, will contentedly leave the title of worſhip to thoſe who are more fond of it, and incumber themſelves no longer with ſo troubleſome an office.

ΩΦΕΛΕΙΝ Η ΜΗ ΒΛΑΠΤΕΙΝ

Nihil repugnante natura.

1.

COme liſten, good people, both aged and young,
And I'll ſing you a merry and innocent ſong;
For, as long as, genteels, you don't pay for your ſport,
If it does you no good, it will do you no hurt.
derry down.

It is of a man, that in title doth vary,
Phyſician, chirurgeon, and apothecary:
If the meaning of theſe three hard words you wou'd ſeek,
He will tell you, no doubt, they're all one in the Greek.

3.

But, however, I rather believe him the laſt,
Both becauſe he his lawful apprenticeſhip paſt;
And becauſe that he talks, ay and talks, and talks on;
'Twill ne'er out of the fleſh, for 'twas bred in the bone.

4.

As for Oxford and Cambridge, with all their grave rules,
He left them to dunces, and plodders, and fools;
So diſcreetly to Leyden his journey he bent,
And came back in a twelve-month, as wiſe as he went.

5.

Yet at Varſity, lately, he took his degree,
Where he ſtay'd for nine days, to be ſeen and to ſee;
Where the king made him doctor, on humble petition;
But the prince he did more, for he made him phyſician

6.

He much Greek had digeſted, ſo learned, ſo wiſe,
That HIPPOCRATES once he wou'd needs methodize;
That were GALEN alive, he would never now know
His tranſmography'd friend of the iſland of Co.

But 'ith' ſtreet, he thought better his learning to hint,
For a painter makes letters much bigger than print:
So that folks they might wonder whene'er they approach,
He has garniſh'd, with Greek, the outſide of his coach.

The words are but few; but they tell us, in ſhort,
That if he does us no good, he will do us no hurt:
For he now in good Greek, as doctor, may ſpeak 'em,
Not in gallipot phraſe like his old album græcum.

'Twas an old woman's charm that an ague cou'd cure,
But, when copy'd in greek, is more ſafe and more ſure:
For the loaf in my lap, and the pence in my purſe,
If you're never the better, I'm never the worſe.

10.

Thus at once, both his reading and judgment are ſhown,
Where neither the ſenſe nor the words are his own:
And why mayn't he ſay, like the old woman's charm,
If the bill does no good, yet the fee does no harm?

11.

And not only the motto, but actions will ſpeak,
And the policy tell of our rare merry Greek:
On the ſtate on both ſides, ay, and neither, he ſtood,
He to one does no harm, and to t'other no good.

12.

As for poor paultry Latin, he throws it behind;
As 'tis out of his ſight, ſo 'tis out of his mind:
For a doctor he never had been, to be ſure a,
Had he follow'd his nil repugnante natura.

FOREIGN NEWS.

THURSDAY, Oct. 5.

Yeſterday arrived the Mail from Flanders.

Rome, Sept. 20. The chevalier de S. George being upon his departure for his country ſeat, took leave of his holineſs on tueſday, who made him a preſent of a bill of 9000 ſcudi. DP.

Conſtantinople, Aug. 28. N.S. This is now the third month ſince the plague has raged in this capital to ſuch a degree, that not only the houſes of the great men are, for the moſt part, infected; but that amazing diſtemper has ſhewn itſelf in the ſuburb of Pera, and the prime vizier's palace is not exempt; for we have ſeen 12 dead men carried out of it in one day; and, ſome ſay, it has penetrated even the ſeraglio. P.

This day arrived the Mail from France.

Madrid, Sept. 23. The conferences between the king's commiſſioners and thoſe of Great Britain, upon the loſſes ſuſtained on both ſides by the late interruption of commerce, have been ſuſpended this fortnight. P.

FRIDAY, Oct. 6.

Rome, Sept. 17. Mr. Thompſon, late warehouſe keeper to the charitable corporation in London, has deſired to abjure the engliſh religion. DJ.

SATURDAY, Oct. 7.

Naples, Sept. 16. The abbot Vidania, hono. of this kingdom, died a few days ſince, in year of his age. DP.

Stockholm, Sept. 24. The directors of the new company are gone to Gottenburg, to ſee the cargo of ſhip lately arrived from thoſe parts, which is reckoned worth 200,000 livres. DP.

Paris, Oct. 10. They write from Fayrac in Agenois, that one Catherine Fort, aged 40, was delivered of four daughters at a birth, who were all baptized. DJ.

Hague, Sept. 16. Our laſt letters from Seville adviſe, that the ambaſſador of France had had ſeveral conferences with don Joſeph Patinho, about the affair of the company erected at Cadiz, to trade to the Philippine iſlands. The anſwers made by the miniſters of France to thoſe of England and Holland, in relation to that affair, were not very favourable; or, if there was any thing that looked ſo, it was delivered in ſo looſe and equivocal a manner, that it is plain they have no deſign to thwart that enterprize. P.

This day arrived the Mail due from Holland.

Warſaw, Oct. 1. The ſeſſions of laſt week ended without doing any thing, by reaſon of the abſence of the three Lithuaniah deputies of Braſlow, Smolensko and Wyſepsk, who have proteſted againſt holding the dyet. DP.

Paris, Oct. 6. We have a report of ſome britiſh veſſels having taken a ſpaniſh regiſter ſhip, with all the letters and merchants accounts on board. LE. WE.

MONDAY, Oct. 9.

Hague, Sept. 19. N.S. Some letters from Paris inſinuate, that a certain ambaſſador having complained to the cardinal miniſter of the conduct of the duke de S. Aignan, at Rome, with regard to the chevalier de S. George and his adherents, with whom he maintains a correſpondence, which the king his maſter cannot approve of, the rather, becauſe it is contrary to the conventions and treaties of friendſhip ſubſiſting between the two kings: the cardinal only anſwered, with an air of indifference, that that correſpondence (if any ſuch there were) between the duke de S. Aignan and the chevalier de S. George, was not a conſequence of any order or inſtruction given to the ambaſſador of France at Rome; but, in all probability, for ſome private view or intereſt of his own, which he knew nothing of. P.

WEDNESDAY, Oct. 11.

Yeſterday arrived the Mail from Holland.

Amſterdam, Oct. 17. From Warſaw it is written, that the general dyet broke up the 2d. C.

Seville, Sept. 19. The conferences between the commiſſioners of Spain and Great Britain continue ſuſpended. DP.
